WHEELING, W. VA., APRIL 25, 1887.

Boom-Building to the West. A correspondent of the Pittaburgh Commercial Gazette writing from Kausas tells how the boom is built in that and other Western States. The boom town is described as the creation of especulations, helped on by railroad companies having immense stretches of subsidy lands to dispose of. Lacking solid foundation, it happens that the towns so created are mushrooms, and in the end somebody is going to be left to hold the bag.

The interest of the railroad and other boomers lying beyond, Eastern Kaness, with its advantages of soil, rain, nearness to market, roads, churches, schools and all that goes with an older civilization, is passed over, though lands in that part of the State sell for "prices rediculously below those in the western counties."

That which is true of the parts of Kansas is true in like manner of corresponding forts of the country. In the one State

The color is unusually dark. Shearing is making only slow progress in Texas and California. In the latter State the market is exceedingly firm, notwithstanding the advance in freight rates to the Atlantic coast. Western buyers are showing more interest than those from the East, who, for two or three years, have been forced the State sell for "prices rediculously below those in the western counties."

ing parts of the country. In the one State of West Virginia, for example, there is more solid foundation to build on than it any of the commonwealths of the great West. The almost unlimited natural resources of the State invite the farmer, the grazer, the miner, the manufacturer: there is something for everybody, only waiting to be utilized. But the development of the great West has been encouraged by the great land grant railroads and western speculation has been made fash-

Superior lands in West Virginia sell for prices so rediculously low that it sounds like a libel on a naturally rich State to name them. The turn of the tide is not far off, and then there will be some weep ine and wailing and gnashing of teeth among those West Virginians who have lacked the abrewdness to pick up a good thing when they stumbled over it. There are thousands of acres in this State that have more in them for investment than half the lands that are being boomed in

The head of a great concern gains nothing by doing the chores himself. Petty details are better left to smaller men who are paid for that kind of work, leaving the chief time to mature plans and lay out work for subordinates. President Cleveland's mind runs to details, being less at home in the higher walks. He is not content to do some of his office work through other minds and other hands, and so before he is well into his third year he complains that the strain of the de-tails is too great. This is unfortunate
